

Emory Centers for Training and Technical Assistance

Who We Are

We help our clients and their partners develop the skills, programs and policy action needed to build healthier communities. Our services span across all public health issues, risk factors, and professional competencies.

We are strategically located within the Rollins School of Public Health at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia, amidst many of the country's leading public health experts and organizations. Our two dedicated Centers, the Diabetes Training and Technical Assistance Center (DTTAC) and the Tobacco Technical Assistance Consortium (TTAC), have provided capacity-building services to community, state and national programs in all 50 states and territories over the past decade.

What We Do

- ◆ Provide a wide range of customized training and technical assistance to meet clients' specific needs
- ◆ Develop competency-based professional development opportunities through toolkits for self-study, web-based courses, webinars, on-site training sessions, and coaching
- ◆ Manage innovative communication systems, online learning communities, and networks to facilitate peer-to-peer information exchange among public health practitioners
- ◆ Plan statewide and national training institutes that provide supportive, interactive learning opportunities to enhance the work of public health professionals and organizations
- ◆ Curate and disseminate online tools, up-to-date news, and valuable resources to support proven, evidence-based strategies

- ◇ Alignment of partners
- ◇ Strategic action planning
- ◇ Coaching, leadership & team development
- ◇ Coalition building
- ◇ Policy & systems change
- ◇ Facilitation
- ◇ Program assessment & evaluation